As you can tell by the look of the church, Christmas season is over and we are back to ordinary time. I wish to thank all of you who gave me gifts for Christmas. I appreciate your generosity and your prayers.

Many of you know that this new year has not begun terribly well for me, or should I say last year hasn't ended well. For those of you who don't know on December 23rd I went to pick up my new dog out in London ON and on the way back was hit by a van which totaled my car. That wasn't the worst part. The worst part was as I was trying to move my dog from my car into the back of the police car to stay warm, she was able to wiggle out of her harness, given that she's missing her left front leg, and escape. I found out later that she was only out for about 6 hours before someone got her to come into their house. The next day after renting a car and driving home I heard the good news that she was safe. I was overjoyed! On Christmas morning, I texted the adoption agency to see how she was doing only to hear that after all I'd gone through with her, they had decided to take her back. Needless to say, I was shocked and then heartbroken given that this person texted me when she was lost that it was "Not my fault"! She should have had a special collar on that would make it impossible for her to wiggle out as she did. I was quite relieved when I got that message only to be taken aback when the same person said that it was my fault.

I have tried diligently to rectify this situation. I told her about the care that I gave to Sonya as an example, but she wasn't hearing it. Eventually I went to the police, since I had adopted her and paid the fee, to tell them that she had my dog. The police said they wouldn't get involved which really shocked me - where else do you turn for stolen property? I have not given up in my pursuit to retrieve Kali. I have contacted a lawyer and talked to Pat Foran of the CBC.

The adoption agency said they were sending her back to Egypt however I've looked on the adoption site and she is listed two different times, one with her original picture and the name Kala and another with the current picture and her name Kalamata so I'm guessing she's still in the country.

I would ask your prayers, that this situation be rectified soon so that I can introduce Kali to you.

Thank you for your prayers,
Fr. Bob
