GOOD NEWS

Third Sunday of Easter

Acts 3:13-15,17-19; Psalm 4; 1 John 2:1-5; Luke 24:35-48

All too often we fester in our own hurt, even when others turn to us for forgiveness. We may judge that it is better to preserve our sense of hurt than to free a repentant sister or brother from the heavy burden of guilt. Today's readings show us that the graciousness of pardon outweighs the enormity of sin. They challenge the modern believer to focus on repentant sisters and brothers, not on the lingering malaise of personal hurt.

The passage from Acts is part of Peter's Temple sermon. The audience's sin is that they were responsible for Jesus' death. In calling for conversion, Peter refers to the ignorance of the audience. They are to turn aside from their evil way and turn toward God. Though the killing of Jesus is a serious sin, it can yet be forgiven.

The passage from John's first epistle shows that the secessionists (those who have broken away from the author's community) have falsely claimed a communion with God, in spite of the fact that they walk in darkness. They deny their sin. The author replies that his community walks in the light and publicly confesses the likelihood of sin. Communion with one another means that the community experiences the cleansing from sin that Jesus has made possible.

The gospel passage is part of Luke's account of the appearance of Jesus to the apostolic circle. It consists of an appearance and an instruction. In the appearance scene the household meal is linked to those meals where Jesus' forgiveness played a central role. In the instruction scene, Jesus preaches penance and forgiveness.

As Christians, we are not isolated individuals. Our calling is to imitate Jesus. To say "I forgive you" is to say "I love my community and, therefore, I love you." To reconcile is to profess that the Christian community is a forgiving community.
