In the ancient Near East, meals had greater significance than today. In our hectic modern society many families do not share a daily meal, often not even on Sunday. Even when family members are home at mealtime, they are often clustered around a television or alone in front of a computer or gaming console.

In contrast, most meals in the ancient world were communal events. Farmers and shepherds might eat alone at midday, but in the evening they joined each other or family members to share a meal, conversation and each other's company. Including strangers at meals meant welcoming them into the family circle and sharing the family's resources. Such hospitality treated the newcomer as a member of the family, even to the point of protecting her or his life from others. Abraham feeding the three men who appeared in his camp reflects the importance of such table fellowship.

So too does Martha's effort at providing hospitality to Jesus when she received him into her home. But there was another way to receive Jesus, which Mary demonstrated by sitting at his feet like a disciple to receive his teaching. In the Eucharist we are invited to combine both responses to Jesus' presence: hearing his word proclaimed in the Scriptures and sharing his food of bread and wine.
