For the Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time:

The Book of Job, written between 7th and 5th centuries BC, is considered one of the finest works of Israel's wisdom tradition contained in the OT. The main question raised in Job is: Why do innocent people suffer?

The plot of the story is established in the opening twelve verses: Job, a wise man "blameless and upright" with many blessings from God, including children and wealth, is suddenly put to the test by Satan. Will Job remain strong in his faith when all is lost and suffering ensues? Job's response in the face of many calamities makes up the remainder of the book.

Today's reading is part of Job's reaction to his friends, Eliphaz, who attempts to comfort and console Job. But Job finds no relief in Eliphaz's words. His pain is too great. "My eye will never again see good."

At the end of the book, after Job's deep questioning and God's thought-provoking reply, Job does find resolution and reward. But that is not where this reading leaves us. We are left with a stark sense of our mortality and helplessness.

In the Gospel reading we hear about Jesus' "powerful deeds", his many healings and exorcisms at the start of his public ministry in Galilee.

Rarely is the person cured mentioned by name. But in this reading we hear about Peter's mother-in-law. Not only did Jesus cure her, he "lifted her up," and the verb in Greek is the same often used to describe Jesus' Resurrection. So he raises her, and as a result of being raised/saved, she serves. This is the ideal outcome of Jesus' work: healing that creates a servant-minded disciple.

This Sunday (Feb 8) is the First International Day of Prayer and Awareness against Human Trafficking, celebrated on the feast day of St. Josephine Bakhita. More info on www.crc-canada.org/en/node/468 or at the back of the church. Consider adding the special prayer (included on a separate sheet this Sunday) to your daily prayers.
