It is almost the ides of August, perhaps not as notorious as the ides of March, but with the opening of the Canadian National Exhibition this week, it marks the unofficial end of summer. Where did the summer go? And then, with the start of the Olympics, I had solemnly sworn to myself that I would be watching very little of it, I guess with a sports administration background, there was an inevitability that it was going to totally reschedule my days. Well, to make it even more enticing, the games themselves are on a very agreeable time zone with very agreeable hours. Swimming finals and beach volleyball games are later at night. So with all those pre-summer plans about making sure that September could begin in an organized and prepared fashion, all that is thrown out. Since most things are put on hold likely for the duration of the Olympics, it is now time to start gearing up for panic mode. It has been a rather hot summer, not necessarily unbearable, but certainly hot enough to put some projects on hold, like weeding the gardens. My backyard is not yet at the point of being overrun, but it is in need of a couple days of more comfortable temperatures. My construction job has come to a screeching halt and likely will stay that way until the fall. It was to be my summer vegetable garden, it now it looks like next year's plantings. One of the sure signs that summer days are waning is the shortening of the days. The long dusks are ending earlier and earlier so that watering the gardens is becoming more of a challenge, trying to get it in before dark. So there have been a few early mornings, ungodly early, like the sun isn't even up that early. I must admit they have been wonderfully peaceful, watching the morning skies appear, the clouds tinted gold in the pre-dawn heralding of the coming of the sun and the silence prior to the birds singing. No traffic on the roads. It is a magically time, a time filled with wonder and magic, and beauty and awe. Also a time that as inspiring as it is, I still have no plans to make a habit of seeing. It seems it's now or next year for some of those pre-summer promises. The bike definitely needs to come down off the wall and get cleaned up and oiled up. The books on the shelves need to be arranged and sorted. And of course, the pesky groundhog that has taken up residence at the front of the church needs to be evicted. Ah summertime, and the livin' ain't always so easy. Happy beginning of the C.N.E. and make the best of the Dog Days of August. Fr. Roy
