Ruminations

As various parts of the province move into the different phases of opening not much has any relevance to me. I must confess that I did slip into the mall because my phone battery needed to be replaced. It kind of scares me how dependent I have become with that apparatus. Even twenty years ago it was superfluous and it usually got left behind. Now if I notice that I have left it at home while I am driving somewhere, a quiet panic begins to set in and all these disaster scenarios start going through my head. Then the real fear sets in, I know absolutely no one's phone number by heart. I remember my old phone number growing up, the same phone number that in kindergarten was part of our homework to learn for the next day. When I put up my hand to tell the teacher I already knew it, she ignored me and that was the day I figured kindergarten had nothing more to teach me so when the rest of the class went on a washroom break (everything was structured back then), I donned my winter coat and boots and headed for home. I think the school fell into quite a panic and it was a kindly police officer who picked me up along highway outside of Bradford across the bridge. Mom and dad were none too impressed by the fact that I had decided to skip kindergarten. As much as people had breathed a sigh of relief when the hair salons opened, I have enjoyed the freedom of not worrying about being immaculately coiffed. In fact, I have sort of resolved to let the hair go for a while, and maybe it will cover those spots that are a little shy or folliclely challenged. When I look I see carefree beach bum with golden locks blowing in the wind, sun-soaked and curled at the back, not flat and grey. Don't burst my delusion. Same as the facial hair- I have taken a vacation approach and just let it go, not that I am particularly enamoured with it, but I see freedom and vacation, not neglect and mess. With this exasperating heat of summer, I have been able to get along with a couple pairs of shorts and a couple of tee shirts, kind of a dressy set, and the watering the garden set. I feel like one of the characters in the Moondoggie movies. I wasn't much of a restaurant person at the best of times and the thought of sitting out on a patio in this heat and with the plague of bugs that accompany summer is utterly unappealing. But what has finally been of great excitement is the opening of my gym. There are of course many restrictions, including numbers, but I had always been able to get in there at slow times and if there were three people present, I deemed it crowded. Well now the numbers restrictions ensure a quiet and uncrowded visit. The first day it opened I was in early in the morning and although I had to cut my usually intensity, it felt so great to be back working out. I was a bit sore the next day but it was a good sore. I had said that my perfect vacation would be if everyone left me to my own devices and I could go to the gym – well, my prayers have been answered. Now if the Leafs win this peculiar Stanley Cup and I win the lottery, it will be a perfect divine trifecta. Fr. Roy

SETON STORY TIME

Parents don't forget to watch our Seton Story Time on our Facebook Page under videos. Join Lena, our wonderful story teller, in our library as she reads some of our great library books for children. The kids will love it.

Masks are Mandatory

The newest By-law in York Region came into effect on Friday, July 17, mandatory that masks must be worn in public places in-doors. For us, that means that all in the congregation must wear masks during the celebration from the moment they enter the building until the exit the building. Provision is made for the reception of Communion., for lecturing, and for presiding. There are a few exemptions for those with respiratory issues but the expectation because of their fragile health system is that they would not be present anyway.

The wearing of the mask is to protect the other people in the building. Out of Christian respect for others, we oblige the By-law to lessen (not eliminate) to lessen the risk that we become the source of our sisters and brothers contract the Virus. We carry with us as possibility our bubble and the places we have been. Please remember to wear a mask, and if the wearing of a mask it not possible, reconsider endangering the community as we Worship.

Great News for the RCIA

We have permission from the Cardinal to finally initiate our RCIA family. They have been waiting patiently since Easter when they were to be initiated at the Easter Vigil. So the good news is that we will initiate them on Saturday, August 8, at 1:00 pm. Because of the various restrictions, attendance is limited. When we have final numbers of their family and friends, we will open the doors to other parishioners who may want to join us for this great celebration. Please pray for them as they take this big step.

Liturgical Precautions

I received a note asking why I am not wearing a mask during the consecration of the bread and wine because particulates may infect the host and chalice. The mandate from the Bishop says that the only bread on the plate and the only wine in the cup is to be consumed by the Priest alone. All the bread that is blessed is safe and secure under the lidded container. Nothing consumed by the congregation is uncovered to maintain the dignity of the Eucharist and the safety of those who choose to risk coming to Mass. Got it covered, figuratively and literally.

Let us pray for the sick...
