Ruminations ....

There is a saying that if one has but two cents to spend, spend one on a loaf of bread and the other on music. The bread will provide the means to survive, the music the reason. I guess like most of us non-singers, we have a secret fantasy to be able to belt out a show stopping tune that brings tears to the eyes of the listeners. In grade thirteen the guidance councillors were helping the soon to be graduates formulate plans with optional personality profiles. My guidance councillor also happened to be the drama coach. Drama back then was an extracurricular activity. Over the years I had played in several of them, and won the lead for a Woody Allen comedy "Don't Drink the Water". One day when my profile tests returned from wherever they were processed, remember this was before computers, they indication that I should be heading off to study dramatic arts at university. My guidance councillor who had directed me for several years concurred. The lowest scores were for commerce and the like which made my sports administration aspirations seem rather misdirected. The problem with the drama course was the audition to get in - it involved singing at the audition. Even today I have a great reticence to singing in public, but it's part of the job description. In fact, there is a lot more that the presider can sing, but as a personal favour to the People of God, I am doing them a great service by knowing my limits and that they deserve not to be reduced to 'nails on a chalkboard' sounds that disrupt the liturgy. You're welcome. Needless to say, fear got the best of me and I opted for Sports Administration, alas. I remember someone leaving the church after mass in Victoria Harbour remarking how my singing reminded him of Pavarotti. I thanked him commenting that I do my best with a limited voice. He said he wasn't referring to my voice but rather that with my size, my stance reminded him of Pavarotti. True story. Needless to say, musical theatre is a secret wish of mine. So, last Saturday night was a touch of heaven. Do you ever wonder what happens to people with the talent to hold their own on professional stages but never get the part, or who chose other options in life, they bring a little touch of Broadway to us lesser mortals who never get to New York. Cadina and friends, most from local musical theatre groups, none of whom would be out of place in big productions, presented a breath-taking, awe-inspiring, repertoire of some of the most classic Broadway tunes. I was mesmerized as was the crowd. And the 23 piece Orchestra sounded like they were right out of some orchestra pit from the West End in London. It was pure magic as they all brought this extraordinary gift to our parish. And the professionalism that accompanied the presentation, the quality of sound watched over by our own resident sound guy, it was so worthy of the stellar accolades and standing ovation that drew the evening to a close. There is only one minor issue or complaint. It seems that my solo number got scratched from the program. You can thank Cadina for that tender mercy. Bravo. Bravo. Bravissimo. Fr. Roy

'We are all God's chosen ones'

We are truly blessed and grateful for the incredible gift of the infants, the children, the youth and, all the parents, of our parish family. Let us pray, for all the children of God and, for their parents, that they will know how deeply God loves them and how important it is to embrace living a Catholic way of life.
