Mothers' Day growing up had a precise rhythm. It was centered around a trip out to the farm. As much as it was a day to honour mother, which the school did a pretty good job of making us remember with the crafting of tissue flowers, folded, tied and each layer delicately separated, or the tissue paper hyacinth card, or the various other crafty art projects. For our family it was also birthday central, and often, weather permitting, a work day in the reforestation around the pond at the farm. I used to think it was quite a unique way of celebrating all six of our birthdays at once. In our family, they congregated between April and June. Mothers' Day was close enough to the centre point to make sense of picking it as the target day. Looking back, I realize that practicality and killing two birds with one stone was more at the heart of this family gathering than was a desire for uniqueness, but no matter. My grand aunts would have gifts, a big turkey dinner, and cake, and the cake always had little thimble size cups inserted into the cake, and each cup was filled with sparkling wine. We were always intrigued and excited at this indulgence. It was the occasion whereby we saw the birthday gifts knowing exactly what was inside, navy blue shorts and the dreaded pink shirts. My great fortune was that they could never get my size right and so I think there was only one year where I had to don the garb until we got home, never to be worn again. They would always get upset when after lunch, we would sneak over to the other part of the farm and explore the barn and the pig sty. Somehow they always knew we had been there. Maybe the straw and the mud gave it away. Those days are long gone. The barn is torn down, the orchard cut down. When it came time to start a new way of celebrating Mothers' Day, we were kind of at a loss. There was no more cake with sparkling wine glasses stuck into the icing. There was no need to clear away winter fallen logs, or burn bundles of branches. And thankfully there were no presents of navy shorts and pink shirts. That is when a new celebration began to emerge. So as any resourceful sons would do, we decided that we would either go out for dinner or order in dinner. No more turkey dinners. This is when the now long standing tradition of Mothers' Day Chinese Food began. That was long before there was even a thought of a Chinese Restaurant in Holland Landing. Now, the Dragon King is an intimate part of our celebration. We submit our order on Saturday to avoid the rush, and dine exquisitely on Mothers' Day. Not sure how to say it in Cantonese or Mandarin, but Happy Mothers' Day and may your Chinese fortune cookies come true. Fr. Roy
