Alcoholic Anonymous meet every Saturday at 8pm Knights of Columbus room.

I'm not sure if there has ever been a study done to see the relationship between staring at a blank computer screen waiting for inspiration to come and cancer. At least in the meantime I am able to do something very important and necessary- hunting chipmunks again. As the pressure of a deadline looms before I can leave to go on the annual priests' seminar, the Ruminations must be done. So I have planted myself in the living room staring out the patio door to the trap, armed with the string that I will pull once the rodent enters the trap. I am well versed in the practice and patience necessary to do the deed. So as I sit sentinel in the great act of ridding my backyard from 'tamias striatus' the official Latin name- it even sounds like a deadly disease, I can't help but reflect upon the exceptional albeit unwarranted occasion of the 25th Anniversary (thank you one and all - it was a very humbling though delicious and fun day). What popped into my head was the motto of the Knights of Columbus - "tempus fugit" or 'time flies'. Now this is not a commercial for their upcoming "Chefs' Dinner" though it is a good feed and fun time.... As the pictures of my youth flashed across the screen, seeing old school pictures and family shots, the ice rink in the front yard, the majestic elm tree in our back yard, it certainly causes one to pause and reflect how incredibly quickly it all passes. I suppose most of the time we sigh those words 'time flies', but I get a sense that it can also serve as an emphatic warning- a kind of wakeup call that really only people of a certain vintage or life experience can truly appreciate. Time does indeed fly by and it seems at an incredibly quicker and quicker speed - except when you are sitting and waiting for a chipmunk to scurry into its re-location contraption. This will be the 25th priests' seminar that I have attended and they all sort of blur into each other. There are few moments of any of them that I actually recall, even though these are to serve as our professional development. I no longer look to them for such, but rather as an opportunity to reconnect with priest friends that I may not have seen for several years, depending on the unfolding of our schedules. That is what recharges the batteries. And let's face it, with our priest network, since I am on the second week of the seminars, all the good stuff has already filtered through the system. As rumour has it, any pertinent relevance to 'professional development' is reported to be sparse so let's hope some of those priests I haven't seen since last year have registered for this seminar too. Perfect timing, the little rodent just -yank- got his re-location papers. As much as time flies, timing is everything. Bon voyage Fr.
