In our little convenience store in Holland Landing, McLeod's, they had many of the stereotypical layouts. There was the big water cooler that kept the bottles of pop cold and wet. They had the big freezer for popsicles and ice cream. They had a special shelving unit in the back where those people who subscribed to the daily newspapers could come in and pick them up. They also had a shelf that was out of reach for most young ones. On this shelf they kept the packages of Freshie in bright, colourful, foiled packages that announced the flavour. This was the Canadian version of Kool-Aid. The Freshie packages were 5 for 29 cents. So I don't think that I have ever had actual Kool-Aid. I couldn't help thinking about that during the horrific lightning and thunderstorm that rolled through just as the election results started to be posted. So you can interpret the crashes of thunder however you wish, I have my own take on that literary device called pathetic fallacy, but amidst flipping back and forth between the election results and really important stuff – the Blue Jays game of course, I watched with a subdued complacency- not contentment- because with my discontent with our electoral system, I considered it a lose –lose-lose situation at best. It astounds me that consistently our majority governments reign with less than half the population voting for them, and we sit back and accept this. A majority of the people rarely want the government that rules us. It is downright absurd. More people don't want a particular government than do, and so in fact we have a minority majority. And the spin that the politicians put on the results is sometimes so far from truth that at best it is self-deception and at worst, self-imposed blindness. Now we have a leader who has made it public policy to exclude Catholics from the possibility of being a candidate. No pro-life person may run as a Liberal candidate. Yet, in this prejudicial, utterly undemocratic, diabolical and dictatorial edict, the new prime minister of Canada has stated unequivocally that I am un-Canadian. What would the reaction be if it were declared that you cannot be a candidate if you believe in immigration, or Islam, or universal health care? This is nothing other than tyranny and yet no one has decried the injustice of it all. Tyranny rarely presents itself in all its ugliness. It usually lulls us into false hope, enticing deceptions, nice hair and good teeth.

NOT
YOU'RE ELECTED, CHARLIE BROWN

If this political exercise is the best we can do, then God help us all- we are lost as a people of integrity and rationality. We should be embarrassed that we are not astute enough to demand better and expect more. I for one have not drunk the Kool-Aid. Pv. Roy
