Eighth central theme in recent Church teaching on the environment

8. Responses to Current Environmental Problems

The Church does not propose or evaluate specific technical solutions to our current environmental problems. Rather, her task is to remind people of the relationship between creation, human beings, and the Creator. Nonetheless, there are certain general principles without which problems cannot be remedied. These include:

- The Urgent Need for Action: Actions are needed that can be implemented sooner rather than later.
- Policy Development: Policies need to be developed to protect the environment. It is through clear policies that a government protects the common good against selfish interests, whether corporate or individual.
- International Cooperation: Nations cannot solve environmental problems alone. The interdependence of ecosystems requires policies that go beyond the borders of states.
- Financial Responsibility: The costs of implementing policies should lie primarily with the states who bear responsibility for the problem in the first place and not with those states who are its victims and who represent the poorest populations.
- Lowering Consumption: Developed nations must decrease their consumption of goods. Developing nations must take care to use the earth's limited resources wisely.

Conclusion of the document by the CCCB Episcopal Commission for Justice and Peace, Building a New Culture: Central Themes in Recent Church Teaching on the Environment

Often enough, the actions of nations, governments, industries, and other organizations have not respected the proper relationship of human beings to the earth. Yet it is also true that, perhaps equally often, we as individuals have been guilty of not showing proper respect and care for our environment, whether through action or omission. This is why Blessed John Paul II, in a joint statement with the Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew I, declared that “a new approach and a new culture are needed, based on the centrality of the human person within creation and inspired by environmentally ethical behavior stemming from our triple relationship to God, to self and to creation.”¹ Each of us is responsible for doing our part to build up this culture, which must be a culture of “life” in every sense of the word. But since this new culture can only develop when we recognize the proper way of relating to God, to ourselves, and to the rest of creation, the eight themes above have been presented to help Catholics in this task of cultural renewal. For it is our duty “to encourage and to support all efforts made to protect God’s creation, and to bequeath to future generations a world in which they will be able to live.”² May the Lord grant to Catholics and to all people of good will the virtue of hope, so that we will not lose heart as we strive to safeguard our environment.
