"The kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed that someone took and sowed in his field; it is the smallest of all the seeds, but when it has grown it is the greatest of shrubs and becomes a tree, so that the birds of the air come and make nests in its branches."

The Clerical Stole: The most significant of all vestments a member of the clergy wears is a simple strip of material known as a stole. The stole is derived from the Latin word for garment, 'stola.' It was a scarf-like garment worn by imperial members of the social class, and was confined to a particular individual level. The Latin Vulgate also uses stola for specific instances. A passage that illustrates this is found in Luke 15:22 regarding the robe that the Prodigal Son has to wear. The 'yoke of Christ' was sometimes associated with the term, but it's now generally associated with the chasuble.

A more widespread opinion from tradition suggests the stole could have its origin in a kind of liturgical cloth called an orarium, which was very close to the sudarium. The Sudarium of Oviedo is a bloodstained piece of cloth believed to be the cloth that was wrapped around the head of Jesus Christ after he died as described in John 20: 6-7. This is the reason why it's still called the orarium in many places. It means that a priest offers his life to mirror the sacrifice of Calvary when Christ offered his life on the cross.

A priest (including Bishop) wears the stole around his neck with the ends hanging down in front, while the deacon places it over his left shoulder and ties it crosswise at his right side, similar to a sash. The stole also refers to eternity; deriving from the eternal priesthood of Jesus Christ who is an eternal priest of the Order of Melchizedek. For the deacon, it refers to Jesus the eternal priest who came not to be served but to serve. That is why a similar piece of fabric to the orarium is connected to the napkin that Jesus used to wash the disciples' feet and serves as a fitting symbol for the yoke of Christ, which is also referred to as the yoke of service.

Of all the vestment the clergy uses, it is only the stole without which a Mass cannot be celebrated. If for a very critical reason, the priest must receive the permission from the Bishop. It is often said that the Mass is the symbol of the priesthood or the diaconate for that matter. In the majority of countries, a priest has to be buried with his stole.
