Central Themes in Recent Church Teaching on the Environment: Eighth central theme in recent Church teaching on the environment

8. Responses to Current Environmental Problems.

The Church does not propose or evaluate specific technical solutions to our current environmental problems. Rather, her task is to remind people of the relationship between creation, human beings, and the Creator. Nonetheless, there are certain general principles without which problems cannot be remedied. These include:

- The Urgent Need for Action: Actions are needed that can be implemented sooner rather than later.
- Policy Development: Policies need to be developed to protect the environment. It is through clear policies that a government protects the common good against selfish interests, whether corporate or individual.
- International Cooperation: Nations cannot solve environmental problems alone. The interdependence of ecosystems requires policies that go beyond the borders of states.
- Financial Responsibility: The costs of implementing policies should lie primarily with the states who bear responsibility for the problem in the first place and not with those states who are its victims and who represent the poorest populations.
- Lowering Consumption: Developed nations must decrease their consumption of goods. Developing nations must take care to use the earth’s limited resources wisely.
