Environmental Stewardship - Vatican at United Nations Climate Summit:

As reported in the Vatican News, "The Holy See has called for 'an authentic cultural change' to combat climate change which is man-made and therefore man's responsibility." In his address to world leaders at the UN Climate Summit, Vatican Secretary of State, Cardinal Pietro Parolin noted that scientific studies emphasize that human inaction in the face of global warming carries great risks and socio-economic costs, with grave consequences for the most vulnerable sectors of society and for future generations: "Confronting seriously the problem of global warming requires not only strengthening, deepening and consolidating the political process on a global level, but also intensifying our commitment to a profound cultural renewal and a rediscovery of the fundamental values upon which a better future for the entire family can be built."
