WHY AM I A CHRISTIAN TODAY?

I shall try to report what I am trying to say and be when I say: "I would like to be a Christian." One has to say here, "I would like to be." in the Christian view, one must in the end leave it to God to decide whether one really is--in theory and, above all, in practice--what one claims to be and automatically is in social life and in the Church on the surface of everyday life.

I would like to be a person who is free and can hope, who understands and shows by his actions that he himself is at the mercy of his freedom, a freedom which throughout life is creating itself and making him finally what he should be according to his original pattern of human nature, a person who is faithful, who loves, who is responsible. I am well aware that such words can very easily sound very lofty and theoretical, that they create a feeling that real life is being shrouded in a haze of fine words, but also that in their meaning there are far from "clear". We can ignore the first difficulty because no one, not even the most primitive materialist, can do without ideals which, because they have not yet been reached, draw one on and keep one's life moving. - Pratice of Faith, Karl Rahner
