THE PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE

One very famous psychiatrist, Dr. Carl Jung, said that after twenty-five years of experiences dealing with mental patients, at least one third of his patients had no observable clinical neurosis. All of them were suffering from a want of the meaning and purpose of life, and not until they discover that will they ever be happy. The vast majority of people today are suffering from what might be called an existential neurosis, the anxiety and the problem of living. They ask, "What is it all about?" "Where do I go from here?" "How do I find it?" You may be thinking, now I'm going to tell you to get down on your knees and pray to God. No, I'm not. I may say that a little later because people who have an existential neurosis are too far away from that for the moment. I'm offering two solutions: the first, go out and help your neighbor. Those who suffer from an anxiety of life live only for themselves. Their mind and heart have been dammed up. All of the scum of the river of life makes the heart and mind a kind of a garbage heap, and the easiest way out is to love people whom you see. If we do not love those whom we see, how can we love God, whom we do not see? Visit the sick. Be kind to the poor. Help the healing of lepers. Find your neighbor, and a neighbor is someone in need. Once you do this, you begin to break out of the shell. You discover that your neighbor is not hell, as Sartre says, your neighbor is part of yourself and is a creature of God. - Your Life Worth Living, Archbishop Fulton Sheen
