Re-Opening of our Schools

Dear Parishioners:

Below is an excerpt from a timely article by Simcha Fisher, “Our plans for school this year will probably fail – and that’s ok”, as it appeared in America Magazine (August 20, 2020).

By now we have dipped our toes into just about every form of educating children, and guess what we have learned? It is all impossible. Every possible kind of school is impossible. Every form of education is a shot in the dark. Every form of education has gaps, dead ends, wasted time, lost opportunities and screw-ups. There is no form of education that gives every child what he or she needs. Added to the complexity of education are the challenges posed by the COVID-19 pandemic crisis. Our various schools have crafted policies that seem sane, safe, and reasonable to me. But if 2020 has taught us anything, it is we have no idea what might happen. In the midst of these challenges, why add to the worry and anxiety? In all likelihood, we will revert back to online education when there is a spike in cases...Life is going to be terrible, and there is nothing you can do about it, so why fight it? Sometimes, if you lean into an attitude of a sort of a comfy despair, that is enough momentum to keep putting one foot in front of the other. I hasten to add there are exceptions...kids with special needs, parents with inflexible schedules and families in rotten and dire situations of every sort...There is no change of attitude that can lessen that burden...

The truth is, all school-aged children are facing a gap-year, whether they know it or not...this school year is going to be impossible. If we do not want to lose our minds, we need to build that idea into our plans....That being the case, let us wake up each morning and willingly set out to do the thing that cannot be done. It does not matter if we fail because it is impossible. It is impossible, so why worry?

God bless,
Fr. Peter Ciallella
