SITTING WITH SCRIPTURE

In the Sermon on the Mount, the Lord compares His followers to salt and to light. It is important to note that both elements exist for the sake of something else. In the society of Jesus' time, salt was used not only to season meat, but above all the preserve it from spoiling. In the age before refrigeration, and especially in hot climates, uncured meat would go bad rather quickly. And light as such cannot really be seen. It is appreciated only inasmuch as it illuminates objects in the world. Therefore, both light and salt, we might say, efface themselves for the sake of the other. What purpose do the followers of Jesus have up and down the ages? It is to season, to illumine, the preserve, and to enhance the wider human family. Just as Israel was not chosen for its own sake, but rather to be a magnet to the rest of the world, so the Church, the new Israel, is set apart for the good of the world. The disciples of Christ Jesus are, essentially and not accidentally, people with a mission: they have been sent. So the prophet Isaiah promises that if we share our bread with the hungry, shelter the oppressed, the widow and the homeless, clothe the naked and do not turn our back on our own, then our "light shall break forth like the dawn."
