THE VIRTUE OF LOVE

The culture often associates passion with love. But we should be careful not to equate mere feelings, however intense, with love because they can be very different realities. As Pope Benedict understood, “Sentiments come and go. A sentiment can be a marvelous first spark, but it is not the fullness of love” (Id., 17). Likewise, Pope Francis adds, “Love cannot be reduced to an ephemeral emotion. True, it engages our affectivity, but in order to open it to the beloved and thus to blaze a trail leading away from self-centeredness and towards another person, in order to build a lasting relationship; love aims at union with the beloved” (Lumen Fidei, 27). As a theological virtue, love is a habitual and firm disposition to seek to become like the Lord in concrete situations, loving God and our neighbor, and giving us the spiritual freedom of the children of God (CCC 1803, 1822, 1828). Further, one of the words for “love” in Latin is “caritas,” from which the word “charity” is derived, and so to love is also the self-sacrifice of giving yourself freely, willing and seeking the good of another (CCC 1766). Saint Paul provides an incomparable depiction of the virtue of love in his first letter to the Church of Corinth. Love, he said, is patient and kind, rejoicing in truth, and it is not jealous or boastful, arrogant or rude, but bears all things, hopes all things, endures all things (1 Corinthians 13:4-8). Pope Francis expounds upon these words in a beautiful way in chapter four of Amoris Laetitia, his exhortation on love in the family. In particular, love is relationship, and the fullness of love is directed toward union, toward communion. The fullness of love is also fruitful. By its very nature, it is dynamic and creative, seeking to burst out from itself and bring new life. Each one of us, in fact, finds our origin in love. Love is our final destination too, and all points in between. Further, it is in love – and only in love – that the world will be redeemed. - Cardinal Donald Wuerl, The Catholic Standard
